John Amos Comenius

(*1592 Moravia, † 1670 Amsterdam) was a Czech pedagogue, philosopher and protestant theologian.

His life was dominated by the Thirty Years' War (1618 till 1648), the struggle for religious freedom and the freedom of thinking and knowledge as well as survival standing between different blocs and interests. He was forced to leave his homeland and studied theology in Heidelberg and other places. In Poland he strictly speaking started his pedagogical work.

He was the first to think and practice pedagogic from the perspective of a child. Being a forerunner of a popular and child-oriented education, he advocated the systematic use of pictures and graphicness for didactic purposes. His dictum was:

omnes omnia omnino excoli (Teaching everybody everything entirely).

Not only major education programmes of the EU and the Comenius-Edu-Media-Award were named after him but also universities, many schools, streets and places as well as a park in the Neukölln district of Berlin. Bills of Czechoslovakia and the Czech Republic carry his portrait in his honour.
